Autism spectrum disorder (ASD) is a neurodevelopmental disorder characterized by behavioral abnormalities and deficits in socialization, communication, and interaction. Previous studies have shown that SEL1L gene is associated with ASD risk. SEL1L encodes thiol-specific antioxidant protein (TSAO), which plays a role in cysteine catabolic pathway. Several rare variants in the gene have been reported. However, the contribution of common variants to ASD etiology has been insufficiently investigated. We conducted a comprehensive analysis of the SEL1L gene in order to identify the role of common genetic variants in ASD and intellectual disability (ID).
