Field of the Invention This invention relates to an improved process for the production of acetic acid by reaction of methanol and carbon monoxide over a catalyst comprising copper, zinc, potassium and a solid acidic support. 2. Description of the Prior Art It is well known in the art to produce acetic acid by the reaction of methanol, carbon monoxide and steam over suitable catalysts which may be formed from oxides of copper or mixtures of oxides of copper and zinc, or oxides of copper, zinc and potassium or mixtures thereof. The copper and the zinc are present in substantially the same proportion in the copper zinc mixture, i.e. their atomic ratio is in the range of about 9.5 to 1.5 to 1. The potassium is present in a very small amount, usually less than 1% of the total combined amounts of the oxides of copper and zinc. In general, in the processes of the prior art the mixture of oxides of copper and zinc was supported on a porous support which may be an alumina or other refractory metal oxide. Examples of such copper zinc catalysts are shown in U.S. Pat. Nos. 2,287,264 and 2,296,265 and British Pat. No. 872,390. In some of these catalysts the support may be an alumina which is commercially available alumina having a pore volume in the range of about 0.5 to 1.5 ml/g and a surface area in the range of about 10 to 200 m.sup.2 /g. In this type of catalyst the pore size distribution is normally limited to one having a pore diameter of no more than about 200.ANG. and most often the size of the pores is in the range of about 5 to 50.ANG. in diameter. The metal oxides of copper and zinc are usually in substantially the same proportion in the catalyst and the zinc oxide is in substantial excess of the copper oxide. In some of the prior art catalysts as shown in U.S. Pat. No. 595f342e71
