Anyhow, this app can also scan your videos, photos, any iDevice like. Conventional data processing systems provide a variety of methodologies and methods to identify and address faults in a network of interconnected devices. For instance, a particular type of network architecture includes a distributed control system (DCS) or "plenum-based" control system, which enables communication between distributed devices through the use of one or more control points or plenums. One control point (e.g., 110) may include a controller for interconnecting a number of other control points of the control system. Each of the interconnected control points of the control system includes data registers that are accessible by the controller. The data stored in the data registers of the interconnected control points may include a variety of information. For instance, the data may include information regarding the condition of the control points, the condition of circuit breakers, and the condition of power distribution equipment. The data stored in each of the data registers of the control points may be useful for determining the status of interconnected components in a power system. The control system 100 may include a number of interconnected components. Specifically, as illustrated in FIG. 1, the distributed control system includes one or more of a control point 102, a service application unit (SAU) 104, a distribution automation system (DAS) 106, a control center 108, and a central computer or control computer
