federal judge on Tuesday ordered a nationwide freezing of the accounts of 32 Russian businesses, individuals and government agencies allegedly at the center of a propaganda campaign aimed at influencing the 2016 presidential election. The judge, Chief U.S.

District Judge Dabney L. Friedrich, of the District of Columbia, said the move was needed to stop the allegedly illegal flow of money from Russia to help Donald Trump beat Hillary Clinton. Trump had denounced the investigation into any links between his campaign and Russia, calling it “a witch hunt” and “a total and unnecessary shame.” The order targeted the nation’s largest social networks, including Facebook and Twitter, along with Google, YouTube, Microsoft, internet providers and the Russian central bank. “We believe that both the United States and Russia are committed to democracy, and the free exchange of information and ideas is a way to promote both of these goals,” said Congressman Adam Schiff, chairman of the House of Representatives Intelligence Committee.
